MATTHEW XI. 5.

THE POOR HAVE THE GOSPEL PREACHED UNTO THEM.

THIS declaration of our Lord is not ſimply and irrelatively the declaration of a fact, but they, to whom it is addreſſed, are inſtructed to conſider the fact itſelf as one amongſt the many proofs then laid before mankind, that Chriſt was the promiſed Meſſiah, and that He came to fulfil the religious diſpenſation which the Prophets had predicted. The fact, be it obſerved, is connected in our Lord's declaration with the peculiar and miraculous teſtimonies of His miſſion: there can be no doubt therefore that it deſerves to be conſidered as a proof, and as a proof of very conſiderable magnitude; yet however it may partake generally of the importance which belongs to miraculous interpoſition, it is plainly diſtinct from that ſpecies of teſtimony. The evangelical miracles, we know, from their very nature, and from their authentic hiſtory, were intended to produce an immediate conviction upon the minds of thoſe who witneſſed them, to eſtabliſh the earlier authority of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, and to lay the foundation of the Chriſtian Church. The wiſdom of God does nothing vainly. When the miraculous interpoſition had accompliſhed its purpoſe, the order of nature was no farther interrupted: the ſign, and the wonder, and the mighty gift ceaſed, and from that period the inſpired writings of the Apoſtles, authenticated by proofs amounting to a moral certainty, and preſerved, explained, and enforced by the vigilance, the piety and the eloquence of an uninterrupted ſucceſſion of teachers, has been the only viſible means, by which the faith has been maintained and propagated in its true and genuine purity.

The communication to the poor of the glad tidings of the Goſpel, is, on the other hand, an eſſential and permanent part of the Chriſtian diſpenſation, which diſpenſation is repeatedly declared in Scripture to apply itſelf to the ſpiritual wants of all mankind. Conſidered as a proof, it diſtinguiſhes the Chriſtian revelation from the ſecret and ſolitary pride of heathen myſtery, the intricacies, variety and diſſimulation of heathen philoſophy, and even from the excluſive pretenſions to religious knowledge arrogated by the Jews, who delighted in nothing more than in withholding from the reſt of mankind thoſe benefits which they themſelves rather abuſed than enjoyed. So far then the communication of religious knowledge to the Poor, though not ſtrictly miraculous, is extraordinary, and bears upon it, even in theſe particulars, the ſtamp of God's gracious purpoſe and univerſal good-will to all his creatures; but it bears that ſtamp more ſplendidly, when we conſider it as deſcending through every age of Chriſtianity, perpetuated tuated after miracles had ceaſed, by the aid of ſecondary cauſes, and holding its path mildly, benevolently, and ſteadily, not only without any violation of the general tenor of national government and ſocial intercourſe, but rather with a gradual melioration of them both.

It is obvious therefore upon what grounds our Lord enumerated amongſt the characteriſtics of his preſence the religious condition of the Poor; and well may that condition be conſidered as a living proof, that he continues to watch over the exigencies of his Church. But how then, and by whoſe means hath it pleaſed Him to preſerve this permanent teſtimony to the truth and divinity of the Goſpel diſpenſation? The means may be traced from the firſt foundation of eccleſiaſtical communities to the preſent hour, which, after they had loſt the ſuſtaining hand of apoſtolical authority, were permitted, under the ſuperintending Providence of God, to depend upon human aid for their ſupport, upon the piety of private individuals, the munificence of princes, and, beſt and finally, upon the ſound wiſdom of civil governments, with whoſe policy and character they were gradually interwoven. It would be ſuperfluous to ſtate before this Aſſembly even the outline of this progreſs and participation; it is enough to remark, that wherever the Goſpel has been preached, the Poor have been inſtructed in its precepts; and although it is not to be diſſembled, that in ſome ages and countries, and under the influence of prieſtly artifice and domination, the lower order of Chriſtians eſpecially have been but partially enlightened, or, what is worſe, have been called upon to receive error in the place of truth, yet theſe abuſes are rather to be numbered amongſt the evils incident to every good which is intruſted to the hands of man, than to be conſidered as any argument that God had forgotten his gracious purpoſe, or obliterated any one of its appropriate characters.

But when we bring this queſtion home to ourſelves and to our own country, we cannot but acknowledge that the evidence is kept alive in all its vigour, and that the good is done in all its purity under that form of Church Government, which the wiſdom and learning of our anceſtors have eſtabliſhed, and through the careful and diſcreet correction of the errors, which had obſcured the ſimplicity of our faith, and the abuſes which had contaminated our public worſhip. The civil and religious polities have here been duly and legitimately incorporated, and a Miniſtry has been formed, who in all their departments are active and efficient. If in ſome, their duties appear to be leſs painful and laborious than in others, we ſhrink not from the obloquy, which amongſt misjudging people this inequality has occaſioned. It is for the advantage, not only of the community at large, but of every rank and deſcription of perſons employed in the Miniſtry itſelf, that the Church of ſuch a country as this, of every country, which poſſeſſes the means of ſuch an eſtabliſhment, ſhould be ſo conſtituted. It ought to poſſeſs its ſtations, not of pride, but of dignity; not of indolence, but of that comparative leiſure, which as it gives ſcope and opportunity for the exerciſe of other duties, when rightly eſtimated and duly employed, calls alſo for exertions, not leſs arduous or leſs important.

They know little of human nature, or rather they diſſemble their knowledge of it, who would tell us that motives to exertion, reſulting from the proſpect of profeſſional honours, ought not to have place in the minds of God's Miniſters. They will have place, and they may have it conſiſtently with yet higher principles of action. In a well-regulated mind, they are ſecondary, if you will, but they are natural, and it would be eaſy to prove that they are implanted in us by Providence for good purpoſes. It is enough that, in the preſent inſtance, the proſpect of high advancement has often determined the parent in the education of his child, and has given a quickneſs, a ſpirit, and an exertion to every ſubſequent part of that education. The higher principles are well underſtood, but we muſt talk of men as they are. There are other motives alſo, which however reprehenſible when they are ſuffered to predominate, yet, as ſecondary motives, are good and laudable. Lower the fortunes, obſcure the ſplendor of the Church, and you diminiſh the quantity of generous exertion, which leads through that channel to the general good of all. Within what bounds its relative condition and wealth ſhould be circumſcribed is another queſtion, and foreign to the preſent purpoſe; perhaps however it would not be eaſy to fix better limits than thoſe which belong to our National Eſtabliſhment.

But whilſt we ſcruple not to contend for the utility and fitneſs which belong to the higher orders of the Church, as little are we diſpoſed to withhold from thoſe who move in the loweſt ranks of the profeſſion, the peculiar affection and veneration which are due to their pious labours and their honourable occupation. Bleſſed be God, that even in theſe days, perilous as they are to true Religion, the Engliſh congregation, wherever it is aſſembled, in the populous town or the diſtant hamlet, preſents the fair and unaltered ſpectacle of ſimple and primitive devotion. There may be exceptions to the general inference, but it is juſt to conclude from hence, that the character of the Miniſter bears no inconſiderable ſhare in this general habit of piety and decorum. He it is eſpecially, to whom, under the Providence of God, the State has entruſted the diſſemination of that living evidence to evangelical truth, the religious inſtruction of the Poor; in his preſence they are aſſembled together with the Rich, and without any painful or degrading diſtinction, receive at the ſame time, and from the ſame lips as they, the leſſons of virtue and the tidings of ſalvation—TO HIM MEN GIVE EAR, AND WAIT, AND KEEP SILENCE AT HIS COUNSEL; AFTER HIS WORDS THEY SPEAK NOT AGAIN, AND HIS SPEECH DROPPETH ON THEM *.

* Job xxix. 21, 22.

So

So far then, and under this ſingle point of view, the Parochial Miniſter appears to be inveſted with a title and function, which is perhaps the moſt immediately conducive to general edification. This view, however, comprehends but feebly the magnitude of his duties and the utility of his ſervices; nor is it poſſible, within the compaſs of this diſcourſe, to follow him through the minuter paths of honeſt and zealous labour, which he is daily content to tread; ſtill is he in the greater part of theſe alſo more peculiarly the friend and benefactor of the Poor. It is he who aſſerts their rights, who heals their wrongs, and who is the arbiter of thoſe differences, which but for the intervention of prudent counſel, and the influence of ſuperior ſtation and education, would be inflamed beyond the reach of remedy. But there is no occaſion to enter more particularly into the nature of thoſe benefits, which the Parochial Miniſter renders to thoſe who are more immediately the objects of his care, and through them to ſociety at large; they are well known, and may be witneſſed hourly in the wiſdom, the learning, and good example of the order itſelf; in that ſpirit of Religion which is kept alive throughout the country, and in that which is inſeparable from true Religion, the ſteady and unſhaken attachment of all ranks of the people, of the loweſt no leſs than of the higheſt, to their laws and the conſtitution. So true it is, that the Chriſtian Teacher, without deviating from the ſtricteſt line of his profeſſion, and confining himſelf, as wiſdom and prudence direct, to that which is his peculiar province, lays the the ſureſt foundation of public virtue, and beſt ſecures ſtability to all legitimate government.

It would be well if he who ſo materially contributes to this great end, were in all caſes as highly exalted above his poorer neighbours in opulence, as he uſually is by the cultivation of his mind and the refinement of his manners. It would be well perhaps; but the Religious Eſtabliſhment, whilſt it makes part of the national and ſocial order, (as for the general good it ought to do) muſt partake alſo of the inequalities incident to that order. Adequate reward univerſally diſtributed, however grateful to viſionary ſpeculation, is not reducible to practice. It is not annexed to any other deſcription of labour or of virtue; the want of it in this, as in other caſes, if it be an evil, is a neceſſary evil, and we are better employed in deviſing its alleviation, than in lamenting its exiſtence, or vainly contriving its extinction.

The Parochial Miniſter, whom I have attempted to deſcribe, whatever be the pain which he ſuffers from the preſſure of indigence, (and ſevere it muſt be, becauſe his education, and taſte, and ſtation, all tend to aggravate it) yet whatever it be, he is encouraged, like other men, not only to rear a family, but to give them in all the points in which intellectual merit can be viewed, in ſcience, in erudition, in genius, and in taſte, all thoſe advantages which he derived from his own education. He muſt be pardoned, if in this reſpect eſpecially he ſometimes exceeds the bounds bounds of prudence; the good order, nay, the good appearance of his family, not only contribute to his pleaſure, but increaſe his weight and influence; and ſo long as this care, or this pride, as ſome will call it, withdraws him not from his profeſſional duty, ſo long as he is ſtill the friend, and teacher, and benefactor of the Poor, his hopes are juſtified, his ambition is laudable as well as natural, his path is made ſmoother, and his labours lighter. But when theſe hopes fail him, he is not deſtitute of others—I ſpeak not of the conſolations of a well-regulated and pious mind, which enable him to ſuſtain affliction for himſelf—but even at the laſt, and when his protection, feeble as it may be, muſt be withdrawn from his family, he indulges the expectation, that his own good name, and the remembrance of his ſervices, will raiſe up fathers to his children; that he, on whom the bleſſing of the Poor had fallen, will not be forgotten by the Rich; that he ſhall live again in his family; and that the comforts which he was not permitted to bequeath them, will be derived to them from the benevolence of that community, which, however remote from view, he had ſtrenuouſly and unremittingly befriended.

This expectation is reaſonable; it is conſiſtent with the real ſtate of things; and here it is preciſely that the inequality of reward which reſults from the eſtabliſhed order of ſociety, and the ordinary courſe of wealth, meets, at length, not with its complete remedy and compenſation, (for that again is impoſſible) but with that which is practicable, its ſolace and alleviation, and meets with it through the regular channels either of private regard and friendſhip, or of public gratitude and benevolence. We, for example, are this day aſſembled for the very ſupport and promotion of this regular intercourſe of ſocial kindneſs; we are aſſembled for the purpoſe of offering to departed induſtry and virtue a portion of that our abundance, which they deſerved, but which fell not to their lot. The duty we are to diſcharge is plain and eaſy—the widows and orphans of thoſe men, who, to the utmoſt of their ability, were the friends and teachers of the indigent, are committed to our hands, themſelves indigent. I will not dwell upon the relative circumſtances which heighten their diſtreſs; it is enough that they are poor, and that we abound. We are commanded by the written word of God to relieve the wants of others; we are inſtructed by the ſituation in which we are placed, and the means which we enjoy, whom to relieve, and to what extent. There need be no miſtake. The written record is ſufficiently plain; ſo alſo is the language of Providence, which ſpeaks to us through his gifts, and the ſtation he has aſſigned to us. Taken together, they form a clear and explicit code of our duty in this particular. They form alſo its poſitive rule and law; yet ſo it is that the plaineſt lines of duty are often thwarted and obſcured by wayward and fanciful opinions, which grow up we know not how, and gain an influence over general principle and practice almoſt before we are aware of their exiſtence. It is the practice of our own time, for inſtance, to recommend recommend an indiſtinct and indefinite benevolence, which however fair and ſeemly in its appearance, is ſhallow in itſelf, and unproductive of real happineſs. Our powers of doing good are limited by Providence. This very limitation points out to us the neceſſity of method, ſelection, and diſtinction in the objects of our bounty. The charity of the Goſpel, in its extended ſenſe, ſignifies unqueſtionably a general good will and affection to all mankind; but when this general principle is to be applied to action, and employed againſt the real exigencies of life, the charity of the Goſpel goes hand in hand, we may be ſure, with natural and civil order, and never waſtes either time or thought upon viſionary principles of univerſal bounty. The indigent of every kind in their turn, and in proportion to their claims upon our ſervices and to our means of ſerving them, are entitled to our active kindneſs, but the turn and the proportion are never to be forgotten; we are neither to laviſh our means of doing good with an heedleſs and unmeaning partiality upon a few, nor yet with a cold philoſophical eſtimate are we to think all alike, and dole out a ſcanty allowance with arithmetical nicety to one after the other. The charity of the Goſpel incorporates itſelf with the real habits of life, and takes its firſt impulſe from inſtinct, beginning with parents, children, friends, and neighbourhood, and neither violating the feelings of our nature, nor oppoſing itſelf to any of the calls of real duty.

Under this view, which I believe to be reaſonable in itſelf, and ſtrictly conſiſtent with the precepts of the Goſpel, our duty of this day is an urgent duty. The children of the Clergy rank high in the order of your claimants:—their fathers have ſerved you faithfully—they taught and they practiſed Chriſtianity, and it is not poſſible for imagination to deviſe a higher and more important ſervice. THEY FOUGHT THE GOOD FIGHT, THEY HAVE FINISHED THEIR COURSE, THEY HAVE KEPT THE FAITH. HENCEFORTH THERE IS LAID UP FOR THEM A CROWN OF RIGHTEOUSNESS, WHICH THE LORD, THE RIGHTEOUS JUDGE, WILL GIVE THEM AT THE GREAT DAY*. But they obtained not the emoluments of the world. With hopes full of immortality, in this life they have been unrewarded. They need be ſo no longer. Their widows and their orphans, the deareſt objects of their care, remain: they ſtand alone: they have none to help or to protect them. Extend your foſtering hands to their relief, and whilſt you pay the tribute of gratitude to departed merit, you will ſecure to yourſelves the mercy of the Lord in that day, when MERCY REJOICETH AGAINST JUDGMENT†.

I have talked of diſtinctions, but let me not be miſunderſtood. Amongſt the preſent claimants upon our bounty, there may be ſome, whoſe parents were unfortunately to be numbered amongſt the melancholy exceptions to the general high character of their order.—Peace to their errors, whatever they may have been. Let us not in this way, and upon this occaſion, calculate too accurately; let us rather turn our eyes to the ſanctity of their office, and the deſignation allotted them by the Providence of God. To Him be they accountable for their offences, and may His mercy pardon them: let us remember only the dignity of their calling, the preſſure of their indigence, and the innocency of their offspring.

APPENDIX.

THE Secretary having, in an Appendix to the Sermon which was preached by Dr. WARREN, (now Biſhop of Bangor) at the Anniverſary Meeting of the Sons of the Clergy in 1778, publiſhed as exact Liſts of the Stewards and Preachers as he could then procure; and finding that his Deſign was approved of, he has endeavoured to render it more perfect; and is happy to think that he is now enabled, by the kind Communications of his Friends, to lay before the Public very exact Liſts of the Nobility, Clergy, and Gentry, who have been Stewards for the Feaſt of the Sons of the Clergy, together with the Names of the Preachers *, and the Sums collected at the Anniverſary Meetings ſince the Year 1721.

* The firſt Preacher on this Occaſion was the Rev. George Hall, M. A. Paſtor of St. Botolph, Alderſgate, and afterwards Biſhop of Cheſter. This Sermon was preached at St. Paul's, November the 18th, 1655, from Numbers xvii. 8.

The ſecond Sermon was preached by the Rev. Thomas Manton, D. D. from Pſalm cii. 28. This Sermon is in the 3d Vol. of Dr. Manton's Works, p 116.

Dr. Godolphin, Dean of St. Paul's, had refuſed letting Muſic be introduced into the Church when Queen Anne went in State to that Cathedral, to a public Thankſgiving, for ſome of the Duke of Marlborough's Victories; the Year after that Refuſal, Dr. Teniſon, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Lord Keeper Wright, the then Lord Mayor of London, (all Clergymens Sons) John Forſter, Eſq; and others, Stewards, being deſirous of having Muſic, in order to increaſe the Collection, applied to the Dean, who ſaid he could not conſent, as he had refuſed the Queen the Year before. Upon which the Archbiſhop, the Lord Keeper, and the Lord Mayor were appointed a Committee to wait on the Queen for her Conſent, if the Dean's could be obtained, who graciouſly anſwered, She ſhould be very glad if it could be, as ſhe thought it would be a great Means of drawing Company, Company, and increaſing the Fund, to which ſhe earneſtly wiſhed Succeſs; and perhaps the Dean might be prevailed upon to be more obliging to promote a Charity for his own Cloth than he had been to her. Accordingly the Dean did give Leave, and it is ſaid, that either Dr. Purcel, or Dr. Blow, conducted the Muſic, and that the Rev. Mr. Atterbury, Lecturer of St. Bride's, preached the Sermon.
